INTRODUCTION
At work, job satisfaction is something that must be achieved by employees. Job satisfaction is a general attitude that a person has towards their work (Lesmana et al., 2023). Workers will have a positive attitude if they feel satisfied with their work. Employee performance will decrease if the service provided by the Company is not satisfactory. This results in workers not trying to achieve the goals and values that exist in the organization (Riyanto & Panggabean, 2020).

Each individual's level of satisfaction will be different depending on what things or actions the individual is proud of. Employee performance can be directly influenced by job satisfaction. Assimilation with the organization and freedom in innovation obtained by employees can improve the employee's performance. A pleasant atmosphere and good relationships between superiors and subordinates can create a pleasant work atmosphere. Employees will choose to stay and have a long-term career at the Company if they feel satisfaction working at the Company.

The research results show that job satisfaction has a strong relationship, which can be used as an intermediary variable. Previous research examining the effect of job satisfaction on performance concluded that employee satisfaction has a positive effect on employee performance. High employee satisfaction can have a positive influence on employee performance (Sari et al., 2021).
In a study conducted by Bass (1985), it was found that transformational leadership has a significant effect on worker performance and job satisfaction. The results of another study also showed that transformational leadership is effective in increasing job satisfaction with a large effect size (d=0.68). In addition, this study also found that transformational leadership has a positive relationship with worker job satisfaction and worker performance, where worker job satisfaction is also affected by organizational feelings and the relationship between workers and supervisors. Furthermore, another study found that transformational leadership has a positive and significant effect on job satisfaction and worker engagement, where characteristics such as individualized attention, inspirational motivation, and intellectual stimulation have a positive impact on job satisfaction. Overall, these studies show that transformational leadership has a significant effect on worker job satisfaction and worker performance.

The job satisfaction factor in improving employee performance can not only support employee empowerment and discipline but can also support successful performance (Alfarizi et al., 2022). Job satisfaction can describe the performance they perform in the organization. Performance is the result of work that can be carried out by workers both individually and as a group in accordance with the duties and obligations they have in the organization, in order to achieve the vision, mission and goals of the organization.

An organization that uses skill, determination, independence and ability to solve problems within the time limits determined by law that does not violate the law and morals and is consistent with ethical principles (Lasiny et al., 2021). Employee performance plays a very important role for organizations or institutions because employee performance contributes to the performance of organizational functions which in turn also contributes to achieving organizational goals (Alfarizi et al., 2022); (Prayogi & Annisa, 2023), and employee performance encourages the fulfillment of various tasks and responsibilities within the organization (Sari et al., 2021), (Siswadi & Fahmi, 2023).

The main objective of this study is to investigate the impact of transformational leadership style on employee job satisfaction. The findings from this study can provide valuable insights into how organizations can develop transformational leadership approaches to improve employee job satisfaction, which in turn can improve organizational performance and productivity.

This research focuses on the effect of transformational leadership on job satisfaction. The results show that transformational leadership has a positive relationship with job satisfaction and has a significant impact on employee job performance and commitment. The dimensions of transformational leadership, such as idealized influence, inspirational motivation, individualized attention, and intellectual stimulation, all have a positive impact on employee job satisfaction. Relevant research cited, such as that conducted by Bass (1985), also found that transformational leadership has a significant influence on performance and job satisfaction. Deng et al. (2023) showed that transformational leadership is effective in improving employee satisfaction and performance, while Vinh et al. (2023) stated that transformational leadership directly affects employees through high performance expectations and team collaboration. Eliyana & Ma’arif (2019) found that transformational leadership has a direct significant effect on job satisfaction and organizational commitment, and Cahyadi et al. (2022) mentioned that transformational leadership is needed to adjust the values, needs, and priorities in the organization.

In comparison with other studies, the focus of this research and other relevant studies both emphasize transformational leadership and job satisfaction, but this research emphasizes more on systematic literature from 2018-2023. This study used the systematic literature review method with PRISMA, while some other studies used empirical studies or direct surveys. Both this study and relevant studies show that transformational leadership improves job satisfaction and employee performance. However, this study may emphasize more on the meta-analysis aspect of the literature covering various industries, while some studies such as Vinh et al. (2023) are more specific to certain industries such as tourism.

This research provides broader insights into how organizations can develop transformational leadership approaches to improve job satisfaction, while other studies may focus more on practical examples in one particular industry or context. A key difference between this research and other relevant research is the emphasis on industry sectors. Other studies may be more specific to sectors such as education, tourism, or non-profit organizations, while this study is more general covering a wide range of sectors. The systematic literature review approach provides a broader and more comprehensive perspective compared to single case studies or surveys. In conclusion, this research contributes to the literature by providing a systematic analysis that covers multiple studies from different sectors and reinforces the finding that transformational leadership has a positive impact on job satisfaction and employee performance. This adds validity and reliability to the concept that transformational leadership can be used effectively in various organizational environments to improve employee outcomes.

CONCLUSION
Transformational leadership style has a high level of satisfaction with employee performance. In addition, this leadership style is able to increase organizational commitment. With high commitment, employees are more encouraged to create new innovations. This has a positive impact on the progress and development of the organization as a whole.
